A NOTICEABLE CHANGE.

The Transcript, has, for some time past, been the best newspaper published in Oakland. But it has recently surpassed its former excellence. Calvin B. McDonald seems now to be slinging the inhelible ink of genius into its columns, and the consequence is, as it should be, a large increase in the number of its readers. While we widely differ with Mr. McDonald in his political views, and regard him as an unsafe counsellor in matters pertaining to the public welfare, we nevertheless consider him one of the most elequent writers on the Pacific coast in treating of questions where no feeling of partisanship is involved.

In the outset and during the progress of the civil war Mr. McDonald was connected with the war-press of the country as a writer, and among the most ardent advocates of the crusade against the South. In behalf of the decency of our common human nature, we concede that he then thought he was right—that he was enlisted in a just and holy enterprise—although we shall ever think he might have been less savage in his propositions towards, and less cruel in his exultations over the weakness of his Southern breth-From the San Francisco Examiner.]

ver the weakness of his Southern breth-

But let all that pass. A few days ago But let all that pass. A few days ago in the columns of the Transcript he uttered sentiments which go far towards earning him forgiveness from the people he once so ruthlessly maligned. Sentiments alike indicative of clearness of mind and soundness of heart. Under the caption "The Angel of Reconciliation" he says of one of his blood-seeking articles during the war, prefaced by the couplet from Whittier

"The tars of war like stormblish the

The flags of war like storm-birds fly. The charging trumpets blow?"

"We could not write it now, and never ant to see it again. Since then, we have been among the people who were so fiercely denounced, have seen the have been among the people who were so fiercely denounced, have seen the long, rank grass waiving overtheir household desolations, and heard the dead rebel's very "dog that whined in vain, till fed by stranger hands," and we are cured of our patriotic humanity. While staying a couple of weeks at a fashionable resort in Missouri, corresponding with our Calistoga, we saw the rebel widows drooping about in their weeds, accompanied by their forlorn little ones with their childish semblances of woe, and it was very pitiful. One little thing, some four or five years old, and as beautiful as the spirit of the day, was conspicuous. With her we contrived to make friends, under the spreading walnut trees of Arcadia, and at last she came and laid her tiny, snow-white hands upon the stranger's knees, looked up into his face with her great wide, desolate eyes, with an inarticulate reproachfullness, as though we had slain her father at Pea Ridge and buried him in the bloody trenches. We are not ashamed to say that this was more than human returns and she ware could be were and to say that this was more than human returns could be a sure of the same and a same a same a same and a same a sa the bloody trenches. We are not ashamed to say that this was more than human nature could bear, and we were glad to get away from that terrible judgment-bar, feeling as though we could fling the lacerating pen of the political journalist into the flaming vortex of heil, and write no more forever. All this, perhaps, was an unsubstantial fancy, a fever-dream under those suitry, brazen skies; but the sad impression still lingers, and the sweet, accusatory face of that little one stands out in relief on the walls of memory, prophesying against cruel, curseful. ory, prophesying against cruel, curseful, bereaving war.

"The people of that great State at that time cared nothing about Atlantic and Pacific railroads, and didn't want to hear much about polities. They "wanted to rehabilitate the country," they said; wanted to get back their lost trade from the Southwest, which the war had cut off. They did not approve of any course that was calculated to stir up old bitter-ness, but honestly, if not cheerfully, acepted the award of the war's arbitration. and wanted to be friends again. We are glad to see this rational sentiment beginning to prevail in our own State, and that it is being judiciously inculcated by their leading party journal. What had been the present condition of England if the houses of York and Lancaster had kept up their bloody fued to this day? Nations, like individuals, are born to die, and ours will undergo political trans-formation and perhaps extinction in the far distant course of time, but there will never be another civil war to establish a slave-confederacy. The stronger element will overrun and absorb the weaker, as it did in England, and the process is rapid-did in England, and the process is rapidly going on now.

"We have done, then, with talking about rebels, traitors, copperheads and the like, and turn now to address the American people, as far as we can be heard, impartially and respectfully, concerning the new questions that have arisen since the wandering planets have been re-collected and re-adjusted on their orbits, and shall never again so back bebeen re-collected and re-adjusted on their orbits, and shall never again go back beyond the landmark of established Peace. When provoked to bitterness of recollection, we shall recall to mind the Dead Rebel's Child, with her great, wide, wondering eyes, and her air of unspeakable desolation. May God keep the sweet little preacher of forgiveness, and crown her in her young womanhood with that imperial beauty, that spotless innocence, which almost hallowed her childish face, as she wandered about in melancholy solitude amid the walnut groves of Arcadis. And if she shall ever be found drooping on the blood-stained slopes of Pea Ridge, searching in affection among the nameless graves for one of the unrecorded dead, may she look from her weeping to behold the friendly and benignant standard of her country unfolding its application. weeping to behold the friendly and be-niguant standard of her country unfold-ing its splendors in the sun, and flinging its protecting shadow all around her, and say to herself. It was but an incident of heroic war; it was long, long ago; the horrid storm-birds have flown far away, and no longer the charging transaction. and no longer the charging trumpets

Heavy Damage by the Flood.—Considerable damage has been done by the late heavy fail of rain in Yuba county. Jonathan Clark, who is now in this city, received a letter yesterday from one of his partners in Wheatland, from which we get the following: Bear river is very high, and on Wednesday the long bridge just below Wheatland, was carried away. The loss is estimated at about $5,000. The ranches owned by J. H. Keyes, Huifaker, Brewer and Hedge, are all under water, and covered with sediment. The damage done is very large. The levee at Nugents' and Reddens' was broken on HEAVY DAMAGE BY THE FLOOD .- Conamage done is very large. The levee at ingents' and Reddens' was broken on Nugents' and Reddens' was broken on Wednesday last, and the country four miles below Wheatland is overflowed. Oakley's ranch was flooded by Dry Creek, but as the water in this creek is very clear, not much damage has been done by the water at Wheatland.—[Newyada Transcript, Jan. 4.

Walker House.

HAVING THIS DAY PURCHASED THE Walker House, we are now in possession of the two best hotels in Salt Lake City. Of the Walker House we deem it unnecessary to say anything in its behalf, its splendid design and Clothing, elegant equipment being so well known to the public.

The CLIFT HOUSE, though not so well known as the Walker House—having been open but a few weeks—is first-class in all its appointments, the building being new and the furniture of the most fashionable and elegant style. The location of this house is central and commands a splendid view of the lake and ever snow-clasf mountains and aurrounding somery. Its local reputation is superior to that of any other house in the city.

With the above facilities at our command we feel assured in guaranteeing satisfaction to all. Respectfully, etc.
